

GLENDENING.dla

When it comes to crossing the Potomac, things can only get better. Good morning to ya, I'm Dean Lane -- and yer on the Nightside. Up until this week, it seemed like the Wilson Bridge was like the weather: everybody complains about it, but nobody ever DOES anything about it.

Then, suddenly, it seemed questions such as "how much will it cost" and "who's gonna pay" took a back seat to "when's it gonna happen." On Thursday, the governor of Maryland announced they had a "GO" for construction of a new Wilson bridge.

□

We get SOME relief this morning in an interview with Governor Parris Glendening, who believes in "safety first" -- the sooner Wilson is replaced, the less chance of a major disaster.

[TAKE SOT

NAME: glendening i'view

OUTCUE: ...through interstate construction and application grants.

DURATION:2'09"]

Maryland Governor Parris Glendening with WTOP's Steve Eldridge on the current state of the interstate...and the new Wilson Bridge. Thanks for sticking with us through the morning. Yer on the Nightside...I'm Dean Lane.